Get Started
A History of Underwear with Professor Chicken
Hannah Holt • Roaring Brook Press
2022 • IL K-3
From Paleolithic loincloths and Henry VIII’s wives’ wearing underwear on their heads to Mary Walker, a civil war surgeon who was arrested for wearing men’s underwear and clothing to better work on patients, this book surveys the vast and fascinating history of our most private clothing. Modeled by chickens, the history of underwear is traced from the very first discovery – a paleolithic nomad whose body was found completely preserved in ice. From there, we look across time and culture in this completely accessible, new take on boring old nonfiction picture books.

When Nigel looks up at the moon, his future is bright. He imagines himself as an astronaut, a dancer, a superhero, too! Among the stars, he twirls. With pride, his chest swells, and his eyes glow. Nigel is the most brilliant body in the sky.

But it’s career week at school, and Nigel can’t find the courage to share his dreams. It’s easy to whisper them to the moon, but not to his classmates – especially when he already feels out of place.

Debut author Antwan Eady and artist Gracey Zhang have crafted a poignant story about how representation and pride in where one comes from can bring a shining confidence to young dreamers everywhere.

An Interview with Author

Joanna Ho

Joanna Ho is a high school vice principal in the San Francisco Bay area and the New York Times best-selling author of Eyes That Kiss in the Corners and Playing at the Border: A Story of Yo-Yo Ma. In her latest novel, Eyes That Speak to the Stars, a young Asian boy finds inspiration in the men in his family and learns that power and strength come from within.

Eyes That Speak to the Stars is the companion picture book to your New York Times best-selling debut, Eyes That Kiss in the Corners, which has resonated so deeply with kids and adults everywhere. Tell us about the feedback you have received from readers of your first picture book.

Some of my favorite feedback has been from moms sharing stories of their children pointing at the girl in Eyes That Kiss in the Corners saying, “That’s me!” then pointing at the mom and saying, “That’s you!” My daughter, who was two at the time, did the exact same thing the first time I showed her the color interiors of the story. I love that young people – and their grownups! – can truly see themselves in the pages.

I’ve had people message me to say that they don’t have kids, but they’re buying the book for their future kids, or that they don’t have kids, but they bought the book for their mom and all their sisters. People have shared personal stories of pain, self-hate, discrimination, bullying, or overt racism and told me that reading this book was a step toward healing, self-love, and pride. People often say, “I wish I had this when I was growing up.”

Every story and experience that people share with me means the world. It’s still quite unbelievable that something I wrote has touched hearts in these ways. I’m so grateful to all the readers, teachers, booksellers, librarians, influencers, and families that picked up Eyes That Kiss in the Corners and shared it.
This is a captivating and beautiful multigenerational story featuring a young boy, his father Baba, grandfather Agong, and little brother Di-Di. Baba tells his son, “Your eyes rise to the skies and speak to the stars. The comets and constellations show you their secrets, and your eyes can foresee the future. Just like mine.” Who inspired the characters in Eyes That Speak to the Stars?

The young boys in the story are very much inspired by my son, who was five when I wrote the story. If you look carefully, you can see a little Caltrain on the floor of the boy's bedroom. I asked Dung, the illustrator, to include a little train, otherwise my son would have zero interest in the book at all!

The men in the story are inspired by the best memories I have of my dad and grandfather – who I called Ayah – and of my stepdad, my kids' Agong. As a young child, I loved riding on my dad's shoulders. My favorite memories of visiting Aya in Hong Kong were early morning walks up and down mountain sidewalks. My stepdad never had kids of his own, and he adores my kids so much. He will do anything for them, and I love watching the way they laugh together.

The story opens on the hero, whose feelings are hurt by a racist drawing that his friend created. He tells his father, “But it didn't look like me at all.” Tell us about this scene and the importance of shedding light on the harmful impact of microaggressions.

I felt strongly that I had to open the book in a way that called attention to the kind of racism Asian children face – too many of us have had peers pull their eyes into slants while chanting gibberish or worse. In its original version, the boy faces something like this. I hope that turning it into a microaggression allows more space for nuance, because the harm we experience isn’t always overt. When it is subtle, it can sometimes be more insidious because we doubt our own experiences. Maybe the friend didn’t mean it like that. Maybe we are overthinking or being too sensitive. We blame ourselves for the pain or think something is wrong with us. I hope beginning the book with the drawing offers an opening for readers of all ages to engage in dialogue about racism’s many forms and our ability to envision and create something better.

“My eyes shine like sunlit rays that break through dark and doubt...I am the emperor of my own destiny.” This book is about learning to be yourself and celebrating identity. Tell us more about this empowering theme.

To me, this book is about much more than being yourself and celebrating identity. It’s about dismantling the systems that cause us to hate ourselves in the first place. It’s about recognizing one’s own power to create change. It’s about seeing and stepping into the impossibilities of the future and recognizing our own role and responsibility to make that future real.

Much like in Eyes That Kiss in the Corners, the young boy comes to learn that his beauty and power lie in his family, heritage, and history. The more I write, the more I realize this is something I truly believe.

This is an extraordinary tale of family and connection – how did your own family shape you?

I have such a layered and complex family history (who doesn’t?!), and it is one that is constantly evolving. Asking how my family shaped me is much like asking a fish how the water shaped it. My family is everything; it is my water. I don’t know who I would be without them; I am who I am because of them. The beauty and the struggles are all part of the journey!

Through everything, the core of my family relationships is love. Through everything, I have always known how deeply I am loved by generations.

What do you hope young readers will take away from Eyes That Speak to the Stars? And what are you working on next?

I hope young readers will gain a sense of the power they have to chart their own lives and to create a better world. I’ve been working on my first young adult novel, coming out Summer 2022! It’s the story of a Chinese teen who loses her older brother to suicide. She must choose whether to speak up or stay silent as people turn against her family by perpetuating a racist narrative about Asians in the community. I’m also working on a new picture book, and I’ve started trying my hand at a middle grade novel – just for fun. I’m really looking forward to some time to write because I have so many ideas and way too little time!

An Interview with Author

Kashmira Sheth

Kashmira Sheth was born in India. She moved to the US when she was 17 and received a BS in microbiology at Iowa State University. Sheth lives in Virginia, where she writes picture books and middle grade and young adult novels. Nina Soni is a humorous series featuring a charming, distractible Indian American girl. STEAM enthusiasts will find these books a fun read.

Who is Nina Soni?

Nina Soni is a nine-year-old, second-generation Indian American girl. She is intelligent, driven, and curious. Her brain is full of wonderful ideas and plans that run on different tracks. She tries to keep organized by making lists in her notebook called Sakhi, which means “friend” in Hindi. She lives in Madison, Wisconsin, with her parents and younger sister, Kavita. Nina has known her best friend, Jay, since before she was born!

Nina loves:
• Her family (even the extended family members who live halfway around the globe)
• Her friends
• Words and definitions
• Real-life math

And one more thing...
• Oh yes, lists!

What themes or ideas did you aim to explore throughout the Nina Soni series?

The themes and ideas for the Nina Soni series have evolved (and keep on evolving) quite organically. By asking what is important to children at Nina’s age, what makes them tick, what kind of struggles they go through, and what strength they conjure up to survive – regardless of their background – I have developed themes and ideas for this series. Of course, I have also drawn from my childhood and my daughters’ childhood.

When I present various situations and challenges to Nina, she provides me with the answers. Her answers. She is insightful and caring; she is a list-maker and a planner. But she is also a dreamer and impulsive, and that does get her in trouble.
Things don’t go the way Nina plans throughout the series, and she grows from those experiences. Her list-making ability makes it possible for Nina to see how and why something doesn’t work out. It also helps her figure out what does work and why.

This self-discovery process about friendship, family, and the consequences of one’s actions emerges from these stories. I am also able to weave in ideas of empathy and the natural world throughout the series.

What inspired you to explore the intersection of STEM and storytelling through Nina?

In the beginning, there was only a story. I wanted to write the series about a young girl and her sister growing up in the Midwest. Since my daughters inspired Nina’s and Kavita’s characters, I started with second-generation Indian American girls. As I wrote the story, Nina’s love of math and language came through. Mental math and word definitions became an integral part of her voice, and so did her list-making. In each book, Nina uncovers something at the end that she didn’t set out to find. That discovery is emotionally fulfilling for Nina, and I hope it is for the readers, too. The final product is a series with stories that also incorporate STEM.

What role does friendship play in your writing?

Nina’s friendships with Jay, Megan, and others lead to Nina’s self-discovery through relationships. At Nina’s age, friendship is important and liberating. It is easy to go back to your childhood and remember your friends when you were nine or 10. At that age, children start to see themselves as part of the family and as a part of a community – neighborhood, school, city, country, world. They realize it is an exciting world out there, and they want to step outside. At the same time, they are afraid. Friends allow them to have these adventures, fulfill their curiosity, and create shared experiences in providing companions and a support system.

What do you hope readers take from your books?

I hope young readers enjoy Nina’s world, insecurities, fears, triumphs, and humor. Nina’s specific experience may not be like that of her audience because the details might be different. I hope readers can see themselves reflected in Nina’s struggles with her friendship with Jay, her grandiose plans to build a dam, her frustration with Kavita, and her resolve to grow her garden.

Nina offers a window to a world that is different and yet the same. Through this series, the readers can learn about a culture they may not be familiar with and explore universal themes. I hope Nina can fill some of the cultural spaces not often reflected in literature and connect readers with her experiences growing up in the Midwest.

Kashmira Sheth on Feast of Peas.

A trickster story can bring a lot of joy to young readers. I enjoyed them in my childhood, but most ended in a lesson and harsh punishment, which I didn’t like. When I wrote Feast of Peas, I wanted a story with themes of forgiveness and generosity. I mulled over how Jiva’s absorption in his dream of a feast of peas made him oblivious to how much Ravji wanted the same thing. Ravji tricked Jiva, but I wanted something constructive to come out of this tale of trickery. The solution was for Jiva to decide that Ravji’s punishment would be to make a feast of peas, which Jiva invited Ravji to share. After all, what is a feast if it is not shared with a friend?

An Interview with Author

Laurie Friedman

Laurie Friedman is the award-winning author of more than 75 critically acclaimed picture books, chapter books, and novels for young readers. Intended for early emergent to fluent readers in Grades PreK-3, her Blossoms Beginning Readers collection from Crabtree contains four exciting new series available in print and digital formats and includes world language editions.

What inspired you to write the stories in the Blossoms Beginning Readers collection? (Trainer Tom, Silly Milly Adventures, Spots and Stripes, and Moose the Dog series.)

I have a love-only relationship with beginning readers! As an author, I think nothing is more exciting than getting young readers hooked on reading. My goal for the Blossoms Beginning Readers collection was to create multiple series to delight and inspire young readers everywhere. These books include animal stories, family stories, and lots of humor. Hopefully, there's something here for everyone.

There are several series at different reading levels in the Blossoms Beginning Readers imprint, with more being released in Spring 2022. Tell us a bit about these books and why this book collection is so important for young readers.

Again, the goal in creating these books was to offer a variety of series so that there would be something to appeal to everyone. By that, I mean kids at different reading levels and with differing interests. The key here was to leave no genre untouched. The 2022 line builds on the original list of titles and includes mysteries, horror, realistic fiction, sports fiction, animal fiction, humor, and so much more.

Do your stories have a particular message you want young readers to connect with? What do you hope young readers will take away from these entertaining stories?

My goal is for emerging readers to fall in love with reading. I’m not trying to impart a message. I feel like my job as an author is to make reading fun. I want kids to like the books so much that they’d prefer to read than watch TV or go on their devices. For me, the key is to get readers to laugh, sometimes to cry, and always, to fall in love with the characters. I want them to want to keep turning pages to find out what happens next!

How do the series in the Blossoms Beginning Readers collection differ from other series you’ve done in the past?

For beginning readers, it is critical to find just the right balance of action, description, character development, humor, and of course, illustrations. The Blossoms Beginning Readers series books are designed and written to be shorter and get right to the point. Beginning readers must be hooked on the first page. To keep young readers engaged and turning pages, every word needs to move the story forward.

In what ways do you think your stories impact or influence young readers? Why do you think this is important?

I love this question. I feel honored to do what I do. For me, writing for kids is truly a privilege. As a child, I loved to read and write. My most sincere hope is to create books for children that inspire a new generation of readers and writers.

Why do you think fiction stories are essential to beginning reading?

Because they are fun to read! Nothing is too serious or required. These books are only to entertain. They’re a getaway, and who doesn’t want that?

Can you tell us about how schools and libraries are using these stories?

One of the things I love most about the Blossoms Beginning Readers collection is that all the series includes six or more titles. I believe this is an invaluable resource for schools, as it makes selecting books easier. If a child likes one book in a series, there are many more to be read.

Tell us about the resources in the books you have written. Why are these important?

All the books include a discussion guide. These are terrific resources for parents, teachers, and media specialists to use as conversation starters with young readers. Research shows that kids read more when they talk about what they’re reading.

What new book adventures can readers expect this spring?

There is so much excitement coming to bookshelves this spring! Some of my favorite titles include the Detective Daisy series about a young sleuth who solves classroom mysteries. I also love the Camp Creepy Lake books. Beginning readers will be flipping pages in this horror series to find out what happens at the scariest summer camp ever! And finally, I can’t wait for readers to discover the Magic Postcards books. In this fantasy series, a young brother and sister make friends, see new places, and learn cultural traditions from countries worldwide.

That’s just a small taste of what’s to come. I hope readers everywhere enjoy all the books!

An Interview with Author

Kelly Barnhill

Kelly Barnhill is the author of four novels, most recently The Girl Who Drank the Moon, winner of the 2017 John Newbery Medal. She is also the winner of the World Fantasy Award and has been a finalist for the Minnesota Book Award, a Nebula Award, and the PEN/USA Literary Awards. The Ogress and the Orphans is a new instant fantasy classic about the power of generosity and love – and how a community suffers when they disappear.

The Ogress and the Orphans and The Girl Who Drank the Moon have some common threads: both are middle grade fantasies with themes of community, familial love, and of course, magic. In what ways are the books different?

It has never occurred to me to think about a book in relation to others I have written – each of my books, for me, is simplicity itself. If I had to say something, though, I think the main difference is in the directionality of the two pieces – from the external to the internal versus the internal to the external.

The Girl Who Drank the Moon is primarily concerned with the effects of manipulation and cynical re-rendering of actual events – how the story, the most fundamental aspect of the human mind, can be used to connect, enlighten, and build bridges to others. Still, it can also be twisted and exploited and used to build walls instead. A story can tell the truth, and a story can also lie. Unfortunately, recent times have reminded us of this again and again.
In The Girl Who Drank the Moon, the agent of change is in the power structure imposing its will on the individual – the direction of the piece is from the external to the internal. The Ogress and the Orphans does something very different – it looks at the power of individual actions to create good, which build upon themselves to make more good in the larger community. Sometimes people feel that it doesn’t matter what we do or how we choose, or whether our actions are kind or just or generous or fair, because our actions never make a significant difference in the grand scheme of things. Nonsense! Of course they do. Acts of kindness, generosity, fairness, justice, and openheartedness all matter. They all make a difference. We just can’t always see it.

Not only does each action matter, but the collective weight of multiple actions also matters even more. In The Ogress and the Orphans, one single person attempts to make a difference in a small way, bit by bit by bit. And it seems at first that it doesn’t make a difference. But it does.

Where did the idea for The Ogress and the Orphans come from?

During the last presidential administration, there was a moment when it felt like the news was uniformly terrible – cruelty had become normalized, nastiness was a new form of currency, and all our progress towards justice and equality seemed to be going backward. I often did what I needed to heal my soul and regenerate a bit – I started writing fairy tales. This is typically a purely creative practice for me. I write fairy tales longhand in the quietness of my notebook and never intend to show them to anyone. These are stories that are just for me.

But then I started a story about a gift-giving ogress and a wicked mayor and a household full of loving and clever orphans, and very quickly, this story didn’t seem to behave like the others. It stood apart. It had eyes and skin and breath and soul. It was separate from me. I still didn’t think it was a novel – I honestly thought it was a picture book – but I sent it to my agent just to get his thoughts. And my agent sent it to my editor, who said, “Oh yes, of course, this wants to be a novel. Carry on.” And so I did.

Paper cranes appear in The Girl Who Drank the Moon, and the crows are memorable characters in The Ogress and the Orphans. What inspired you to use birds as a motif in both books?

I just love birds. If I could start my life over, I probably would stick with biology in college and become an ornithologist. When I was a kid, my dad kept bird feeders and identification books by the windows, and when we went on family camping trips, the highlights were always what birds we could see, hear, and identify. As I grew older, I became particularly interested in crows’ habits, abilities, and particularities. I’m fascinated by their long memories and complex family structures and their ability to make and use multipurpose tools. They are well mannered and precise and are frankly full of themselves. What’s not to love?

What do you enjoy most about writing fantasy novels?

Everything. The world is a strange place, but we live inside it and have become accustomed to its strangeness and oblivious to its oddities. Sometimes the only way to look at the thing is to step away and shake things around. Emily Dickinson tells us to “Tell all the truth, but tell it slant.” To me, that’s what a poem does, but it’s also what a fantasy novel does. It tells the truth, but slanted. Later in that same poem, she reminds us, “The Truth must dazzle gradually / Or every man be blind.” I think this is the purpose of fantasy – and has been ever since Beowulf and Arthur and the Leviathan and the doofuses on Mount Olympus and Gilgamesh and his unending rage. The world is complex, mysterious, and sometimes sinister – a thing of wonder, beauty, and marvelous strangeness. Sometimes we must tell the truth outlandishly to see the oddness that we’ve normalized and the everyday things that we have transmuted into oddities. Fantasy allows us to ask big questions, take nothing for granted, and uncover truths that we often leave hidden.

The Ogress believes “the more you give, the more you have.” What do you hope readers take away from her philosophy?

For me, it all comes down to the Prayer of St. Francis, something I had to learn in grade school. It is more important for us to love others than seek love for ourselves. It is more important to give than to receive. It is more important to forgive than to be forgiven. It is more important to understand others than to try to be understood. And further – the only antidote to despair is hope. This is all very hard to do. I myself am terrible at it. Despair is way easier than hope! Everyone knows that! And it is tough to love people who espouse hate. It feels like an impossible task.

So much of this book hinges on the idea of the beloved community – what happens to a place when everyone loses their sense of civic responsibility and togetherness, and what happens when neighbors forget what it means to be neighbors and what they owe their neighbors. And it’s easy to feel as though a broken community is irreparable. But it’s not. Kindness matters; generosity matters; empathy matters; goodness matters. Indeed, each action springs from a place of positivity or fairness or egalitarianism or giving as mass and gravity. The collective impact of multiple people doing good builds upon itself. That’s what I want my readers to take away – that their actions have meaning.

What does the library represent in the book?

It’s a funny thing – I finished this book over a year ago, and I had no idea we would land at this moment when cynical individuals are puffing themselves up with their talk of banning books for ludicrous reasons and even burning those books. Just writing that down hurt my heart – imagine what it must do to a person’s soul when they have the audacity to suggest such a thing. It is monstrous to ban a book, burn a book, and attack a library. A library is more than a place, after all. A library is an idea. A library represents the indelible human right of learning, connection, and storytelling. A community’s library is a testament to its past and a promise to its future: these books are for everyone; these stories are for everyone; these ideas are for everyone; these conversations are for everyone. No one is left out. Everyone belongs.

An Interview with Authors

Tanya Lloyd Kyi and Julia Kyi

Tanya Lloyd Kyi is the author of more than 25 books for children and young adults. She writes about science, pop culture, history, or a combination of the three. Her recent titles include Me and Banksy and This Is Your Brain on Stereotypes. Tanya lives in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Julia Kyi is a student and youth activist. She is a co-founder of The Daily Feminist, an organization that offers resources and workshops for feminist education. She’s planning to complete a social justice degree before applying to law school. Julia lives in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Better Connected: How Girls Are Using Social Media for Good focuses on girls’ positive experiences on social media. With profiles of real changemakers and practical tools for getting started, Better Connected is an inspiring look at the amazing things girls can accomplish online.

What inspired you to write this book?

Tanya: Julia inspired me! I’ve always been cautious about exposing my kids to social media. But when Julia and her friends launched a feminist education initiative on Instagram, I was amazed at the thought and effort they put into it – and the people they reached with their messages. It made me look at social media differently.

Julia: We often hear about the negative sides of social media. While there are many valid concerns about the online world, it can also be amazing and powerful! I’m constantly inspired by the young people I see making change and taking initiative online.

What made you decide to team up as mother-daughter writers for this project? How does this perspective bring something unique to this book?

Julia: I’ve watched my mom write my whole life. When she first mentioned this topic, I knew it was something I was passionate about! We were able to combine her experience and expertise with my insights as a young person. It has been a fantastic learning and bonding experience, and we hope young people will be able to connect and relate to the book.

Tanya: I had an inkling of a concept in mind for this book. When I mentioned it at the breakfast table, examples and ideas came pouring out of Julia. I asked if she wanted to co-author it with me, and the book quickly took shape. (We argued a lot less than I thought we would!)

What did you learn while writing this book?

Julia: My belief in the power of girls online was amplified while writing this book. I learned about so many incredibly creative, diverse, and accomplished young women on social media. I learned about world issues and the solutions being created, and I found many wonderful ways that girls connect through the Internet. I also learned a lot about the writing and publication process, as this is my first book!

In Better Connected, we learn about so many inspiring activists and causes. Was there one that stuck with you the most?

Julia: Since my initial research, I have been inspired by Helena Gualinga, an Indigenous teen from the Amazon. She works to show the intersection between Indigenous rights and climate change and has advocated for her community and spearheaded an antipollution campaign. She spreads her important messages to thousands of Instagram followers, and I admire her passion and drive.

Tanya: I was most inspired by the community builders – people like Julie Zeilinger, who founded The FBomb blog for teens. The fact that there are such creative and collaborative leaders out there gives me hope for the future.

Better Connected focuses on the many positive opportunities that social media has created for girls. Can you share some examples of the innovative way it’s being used? Were there any that surprised you?

Tanya: Connecting girls with rare diseases worldwide, sharing pop music to combat stereotypes, reinventing the world of comics – girls are doing so many surprising and unique things online. I was most impressed by how social media allows girls who might not be heard on conventional media platforms – those from isolated communities or marginalized groups – to reach out to people in power and share their stories. Social media is at its best when we use it to forge new and unexpected connections.

The award-winning author of The Truth as Told by Mason Buttle has created another bighearted novel about the special friendship between two children – one with autism who doesn’t speak, and the other who talks a lot – and what happens when one of them goes missing.

Eleven-year-old Aurora’s best friend has never spoken a word to her. In fact, Frenchie doesn’t talk. Aurora is bouncy, loud, and impulsive. Making friends has never come easy to her. When Frenchie, who is autistic, silently chose Aurora as his person back in third grade, she was all in. In fact, she chose him back. One morning, Frenchie doesn’t make it to his classroom. The entire town begins to search, and everyone wonders: How is it possible that nobody has seen Frenchie?

An Interview with Author

Leslie Connor

Leslie Connor is the author of several award-winning books for children, including two ALA Schneider Family Book Award winners, Waiting for Normal and The Truth as Told by Mason Buttle, a National Book Award finalist. She lives in the Connecticut woods with her family and three rescue dogs. Anybody Here See Frenchie? is a big-hearted, beautiful, and funny novel told from multiple viewpoints about neurodiversity, friendship, and community.

You've written several books for children, and Anybody Here Seen Frenchie? is your sixth novel for middle graders. What similar threads do you see throughout your works? How does this one feel special, and what inspired it?

There’s no denying that I love to write about the underdog – the odd kid out. It’s clear to me that they’re untapped; no one has discovered their gifts and strengths. Characters drop into my ear brimming with the desire to have their stories told, and I must do the tapping.

My stories often explore the concept of family and the search for a sense of belonging. In Anybody Here Seen Frenchie?, two families bond over the friendship between their neurodiverse children. A three-parent community forms. It occurs to me that in this story, which centers on the search for a lost child, being able to see an established support system lends a bit of comfort to the reader.

This is your first novel to feature multiple narrators—we follow different members of the search party while they look for Frenchie. What inspired you to write from different perspectives, and how does it connect to how you view the heart of the novel? Did you have a favorite voice to write or one that felt particularly challenging?

While writing this story, I did some deep thinking about how people get lost and stay lost, especially in a small, close community. The multiple points of view came from imagining a bird’s eye view of the events unfolding and seeing all the “near misses” between Frenchie and the other characters. Surprisingly, the different perspectives came to me quickly. Each of them has just three or so chapters. (Aurora does most of the talking.) These characters are essential to the heart of the story because we feel them becoming invested in the search for Frenchie.

Aurora’s voice and character came flying at me—as is her way! She was a girl I could love and write about as long as I could manage to keep her pinned down, that is. Frenchie’s was the most challenging voice for me to develop. (I kept thinking that I had to get this right!) I worked slowly on his very short chapters, which made me think of poetry, though they are not in verse.

While Aurora is such a strong character, this is a tale of community and “collective effervescence.” Can you tell us a bit about this concept, what it means to you, and how you brought it to life in this novel?

“Collective effervescence” is a valuable concept conceived of in the early 20th century by sociologist Émile Durkheim. It refers to the sense of energy and harmony humans experience when they come together over a shared purpose. It can occur on a playing field, during a brainstorming session, at a rousing sing-along, or in the aftermath of a natural disaster. In times of trouble, “collective effervescence” plays out with great force—such as when an entire community unites to search for one of its most vulnerable members.

What does the title mean to you, especially considering that Frenchie is a nonvocal autistic boy? How do you hope that he can be “seen” by readers—and how do you hope children can see themselves or their peers after reading?

Well, there’s a perceptible double entendre there. From the start, Aurora expresses her frustration that Frenchie is ignored or not seen by other kids. Her internal question is, has anybody here acknowledged Frenchie? Meanwhile, she’s made a considerable adjustment by tempering her natural impulsiveness and learning how to read her silent friend’s behavior. She sees him. Once Frenchie goes missing, the question of whether anyone has seen him is a practical one, but it is nuanced by the perceptions, circumstances, and abilities of the other characters.

Without getting preachy, I guess I’d like for kids to know that it’s possible to reach out to almost anyone if we use our powers of observation—and that no gesture is too small. For instance, we can see that Frenchie fixates on birds. So sharing a picture or showing him that you know how to whistle are ways you might connect. Best-friendship doesn’t have to be the goal; inclusiveness is the goal. That’s a win for everyone.

The Last Cuentista
Donna Barba Higuera • Levine Querido • 2021 • IL 5-8
Petra Peña wanted nothing more than to be a storyteller, like her abuelita, but Petra’s world is ending. Earth has been destroyed by a comet, and only a few hundred scientists and their children – among them Petra and her family – have been chosen to journey to a new planet. They are the ones who must carry on the human race. Hundreds of years later, Petra wakes to this new planet – and the discovery that she is the only person who remembers Earth.

Watercress
Illustrator: Jason Chin • Author: Andrea Wang • Neal Porter Books • 2021 • IL K-3
Driving through Ohio in an old Pontiac, a young girl’s parents stop suddenly when they spot watercress growing wild in a ditch by the side of the road. Grabbing an old paper bag and some rusty scissors, the whole family wades into the muck to collect as much of the muddy, snail-covered watercress as they can. At first, she’s embarrassed. Why can’t her family get food from the grocery store? But when her mother shares a story of her family’s time in China, the girl learns to appreciate the fresh food they foraged. Together, they make a new memory of watercress. Andrea Wang tells a moving autobiographical story of a child of immigrants discovering and connecting with her heritage, illustrated by award-winning author and artist Jason Chin, working in an entirely new style inspired by Chinese painting techniques.
