My sweat is DRIZZLING. Stop all that quivering. Cuz tonight I'm delivering," raps twelve-year-old Josh Bell.

Thanks to their dad, he and his twin brother, Jordan, are kings on the court. But Josh has more than basketball in his blood—he's got mad beats, too, which help him find his rhythm when it's all on the line.

As their winning season unfolds, things begin to change. Breaking the rules comes at a terrible price, as their story's heart-stopping climax proves a game-changer for the entire family. Told in dynamic verse, this fast and furious middle

An Interview with Author

Raj Haldar

Raj Haldar is the #1 New York Times best-selling author of the children’s picture book P Is for Pterodactyl: The Worst Alphabet Book Ever. His newest children’s book, This Book Is Banned, is a hilarious and thoughtful read that underscores the importance of the fight against censorship in schools and libraries across the country.

What was your inspiration for This Book Is Banned, and did you have a personal experience with book banning that made you want to write it?

Well, given that my first children’s book, P is for Pterodactyl: The Worst Alphabet Book Ever is about the seemingly innocuous subject of silent letters, you might be surprised to learn that I’ve had more than my share of emails and online commenters calling for the book to be banned. The offending page reads: “O is for Ouija. The French leopard says, ‘Oui! We’d love to play Ouija with the wee witch from Oaxaca.’”

In a way, seeing so many folks up in arms about something so uncontroversial gave me a firsthand understanding of just how absurd the culture around book bans had become. But more so than any personal experience, I felt compelled to create This Book Is Banned after seeing more and more picture books for our youngest readers being challenged and taken off shelves around the country. I figured that if kids were having their freedom to access diverse points of view curtailed, then it was crucially important to create a book that offers a lighthearted entry point to understanding the dangers of book bans and censorship geared toward them.

Book banning is a very serious topic, but you've chosen to address it with humor. How did you strike a good balance in this book between the thoughtful and the funny?

I think there’s an inclination in my work to be kind of “subversively educational.” It’s an underlying thread that runs through pretty much everything I create – books, music, and otherwise. It’s just much more fun to discover things when they’re not being presented in a didactic kind of way. With This Book Is Banned, I felt like it was doubly important to avoid a preachy tone, and if dialed in properly, humor could highlight just how ridiculous book banning is. Honestly, a lot of the book is just kooky, fourth wall-breaking fun that I hope kids will enjoy picking up again and again, but that the surprise ending is potent enough to leave a lasting impression on them.

Why is this book so desperately needed?

While book banning isn’t a new phenomenon, the number of challenges is growing at an alarming rate. The ALA recently reported that instances of book challenges literally doubled in the last year. With so many educators and librarians putting their jobs on the line to uphold the First Amendment rights of children, it felt imperative to use my platform to create a book that can play even a small part, starting important conversations around book bans with kids.

This Book Is Banned
Raj Haldar • Sourcebooks eXplore
2023 • LE

This is a book about dinosaurs. No it’s not. Dinosaurs are not allowed.

Oh. This is now a book about avocados! Sorry. We deleted those too.

FINE. This book is about – nope! Forbidden! BANNED!

Maybe you shouldn’t even try reading this book – but what could possibly be inside?

With each page, characters are erased from the story, cut out, and taped over. This book playfully discourages readers from turning the page, even tells them to throw the book away, but when readers finally get to the end they find an absurd surprise ending – one that shows the importance of free speech. Discover just what happens when we aren't allowed to freely share and explore ideas with this funny, self-referential picture book romp that kids (and grown-ups) will want to read over and over again.
You're a father, rapper, composer, producer, and all-around creative. How does all that come together in this book?

My creative process is sort of the same whether I'm composing for film and TV, writing rap songs wearing my other hat as Lushlife, or in this case making children's books. Especially with This Book Is Banned, I feel like folks might be able to detect a kind of through line between the off-the-cuff element of hip-hop and the kaleidoscopic, non sequitur style of the book. Add to that the brilliant mixed-media illustrations from Julia Patton – which to me sizzle like jazz – and I think there's a real musicality to the proceedings. But, becoming a father of two over the last several years probably has had a bigger impact on This Book Is Banned than I recognize. There's the element of trying to shape a better world for our kids to live in, but also my daughters have been invaluable in helping me zero in on the kinds of characters and scenarios that make kids laugh. After all, the more that young readers have fun with This Book Is Banned, the more opportunity they'll have to connect with its underlying message – and maybe even change the minds of a few grown-ups out there, too.

An Interview with Author
Mac Barnett
and Illustrator
Shawn Harris

The First Cat in Space Ate Pizza series began as live cartoons. How did you two come up with this idea?

Mac: In March of 2020, when school was canceled across the United States (and in many other countries too), I decided to read a different picture book out loud every day at noon on my Instagram. These daily read-alouds became Mac’s Book Club Show, which ran online for more than a year. But after those five days of readings, I was wondering what to do on the Saturday show. The markers of time had dropped away. Kids hadn’t really experienced a week, so what was the weekend? When I was growing up, Saturday mornings always meant cartoons.

Shawn: I also loved Saturday-morning cartoons.

Mac: So I called up Shawn and asked him if he would come on and perform a cartoon live. He moved the camera over his drawings and we did a bunch of voices. To our surprise, it worked! We made episode one of a cartoon called “The First Cat in Space Ate Pizza.” It was sort of a cross between a 50s B movie and a 90s Jerry Bruckheimer blockbuster (except with black-and-white pencil drawings) about a cat who gets blasted into space to save the moon from being eaten by rats. The joke was that it ended with a ridiculous cliff-hanger, and the cat never ate pizza.

Shawn: There was no mention of pizza whatsoever.

Mac: We weren’t planning on making another episode. It was a ton of work and didn’t really feel repeatable.

Shawn: Immediately afterward, people started commenting, “Can’t wait for episode two next week!” We were like, “Uh-oh.”

Mac: The show totally took over our lives. Every Monday I would start a new script. I tried to get it to Shawn by Wednesday, at which point he would start work on between 30 and 50 drawings. He also wrote a new song every week.

And on Saturday mornings, we would get up early and perform the cartoon – Shawn filmed his drawings and puppeteered the paper. We voiced the characters, sang songs, and did sound effects – all live.

Shawn: Tens of thousands of kids from around the world tuned in to what became a 12-part science fiction epic: The First Cat in Space Ate Pizza.

Mac: Our editor, Mabel Hsu, was also watching. She asked us if we were interested in turning the story into a book.

Shawn: We were!

Why did you choose to separate our heroic trio – LOZ 4000, First Cat, and the Moon Queen – in book two?

Mac: This series revolves around three characters: a bionically-engineered cat, the Queen of the Moon, and LOZ 4000, a toenail-clipping robot. LOZ 4000 ends up an unlikely hero in the first book, and so we thought there would be some comedy and pathos if LOZ rejected his calling and left a life of adventure behind.

Any favorite moments from the First Cat book tour?

Shawn: I loved seeing all of the costumes kids wore to our events. There were a bunch of great main characters, but some people made costumes of deep references – someone was a stone, complete with the wall he is lodged in, and we saw an incredible three-headed rat king. What else?

Mac: A pirate, Captain Babybeard – worn by an actual baby.

As childhood best friends turned co-creators, have you learned anything new about each other while working together?

Mac: Haha, uh-oh, hmm. Honestly, probably not? We’ve been doing stuff like this for more than 20 years, making up stories and jokes and stuff.

Shawn: And we already know how much the other guy procrastinates.

Mac: Yeah, that was initially going to be my answer too. But then I was like, Shawn already knows that.

Shawn: You put it off.

Mac: :(
Shawn: :D
Who's the current racquetball king?

Mac: For context, Shawn and I play racquetball every week.
Shawn: You’re stalling.
Mac: The winner gets a free lunch and, for a week, the title of “Racquetball King of Oakland.”
Mac: The title used to be “Racquetball King of the Oakland YMCA,” but then the YMCA took out its racquetball courts and replaced them with weight machines.
Shawn: True, but we should answer the question.
Mac: I’m more of a heavy cardio, lean-muscle guy, so this was something of a personal tragedy, obviously.
Shawn: (Looks at watch)
Mac: We petitioned the YMCA to reverse course, but to no avail. Probably because only two people signed our petition. Us.
Shawn: Go on.
Mac: Anyway, we found a new place to play racquetball in Oakland. It’s really nice! I’m not going to say where, because I don’t want any competition for our favorite court.
Shawn: People are going to stop reading this interview if we don’t get to the point, Mac.
Mac: (The south court.)
Shawn: I believe the question was “Who is the current racquetball king?”
Mac: Shawn is.
Shawn: :D
Mac: :(

The First Cat in Space and the Soup of Doom (Volume 2)
Mac Barnett and Shawn Harris
HarperCollins Publishers • 2023 • UE
The Moon Queen has been poisoned – by SOUP. With few she can trust in her own royal court, she and First Cat will have to journey alone to find the antidote. If only LOZ 4000 were still with them – but our once-heroic toenail clipping robot is on the run, looking for new purpose in this vast universe.

Unbeknownst to our trio, secret forces are working against them. In a world of villainous cowboys, high-speed chases, and falling pianos, can our iconic trio find their way back to one another and save the Moon Queen before it’s too late? And who would want to poison her? Is Captain Babybeard, the adorable baby pirate, in this one?

On the Tip of a Wave: How Ai Weiwei’s Art Is Changing the Tide
Joanna Ho • Orchard Books • 2023 • LE
This story shines a light on Ai Weiwei and his journey, specifically how the Life Jackets exhibit at Konzerthaus Berlin came to be. As conditions for refugees worsened, Ai Weiwei was inspired by the discarded life jackets on the shores of Lesbos to create a bold installation that would grab the attention of the world. Cátia Chien masterfully portrays the intricate life of Ai Weiwei with inspirations from woodblock printing and a special emphasis on the color orange, the same color of the life jackets that became a beacon of hope. Through Cátia’s dynamic and stunning illustrations, we see how Ai Weiwei became the activist and artist he is while proving the power of art within humanity.

The Leaders Like Us series showcases more than 20 illustrated biographies of diverse leaders created by representative authors and illustrators. For Grades 1-4, each title highlights an important leader in fields such as science, the arts, government, sports, and more. To create biographies of Asian American leaders, Rourke Educational Media selected Dr. Karen Su, founding director of the Asian American Resource and Cultural Center and current faculty member in the Global Asian Studies Program at the University of Illinois Chicago. Dr. Su’s first two books feature social activist Grace Lee Boggs and labor leader Philip Vera Cruz.

How did your career or life experiences lead you to writing for young readers?

I was an avid reader as a kid. I couldn’t wait to get home from school so I could just sit and read! There were very few books portraying Asian American stories, yet I still loved reading, especially biographies. My favorite go-to in the school library was the biography section. I read a lot of biographies about girls – white girls really – many US presidents’ wives and queens and princesses of the British monarchy.

I finally found Asian American literature in graduate school and went on to teach Asian American literature and Asian American studies at the college level. When I became a parent and was looking for books to read to my kids, I noticed there were still very few children’s books that portrayed Asian American stories. When my son’s fourth grade class focused on a biography unit, the only biography available was about the great Indian leader Mohandas Gandhi. That made me decide to write books about Asian Americans for young readers so there would be books out there for everyone to learn more about our diverse communities.
What do these two leaders in your first two books have in common?
Both are passionate about changing the world for the better. They figured out how to contribute toward movements for justice. They not only fought with and for Asian American communities but also with and for Black and Latinx communities. Many of my college students learn about them for the first time when they take my Introduction to Asian American Studies class. Many of my students have expressed dismay that they had not learned about leaders like them before and affirm how it would have made a difference for them to learn about Asian American leaders when they were younger.

As a college professor, how did you adapt these stories for elementary school students?
Each book opens with a question or two that relates to young readers’ lives and brings them into the lives of Grace Lee Boggs and Philip Vera Cruz. I also had to explain some concepts and details in a way that younger readers would be able to follow. It was good for me to learn the process of trying to paint the forest clearly and not get bogged down in all the trees.

I especially enjoyed developing the extension activities at the end of each book to encourage young readers to continue exploring what they can do in their own lives that’s related to the leader featured in the book. I would love to hear from teachers, parents, and young readers in the future to find out how their extension activities went!

Did you find anything in your research that you liked but were unable to include?
I found it interesting when Grace Lee Boggs invited her husband-to-be, James Boggs, over for a first dinner date – by the end of the night, he proposed marriage to her! For Philip Vera Cruz, I learned more about his siblings whose education in the Philippines he helped to support. He reunited with them 62 years later, when he returned to the Philippines for the first time since he left.
What do you hope readers will learn from these titles?
I hope that all young readers, no matter their background, will learn that there have been and are important Asian American leaders from all walks of life. It’s truly life changing for everyone to see all communities included fully in the curriculum. Otherwise, those who are absent seem like they aren’t as important. That is psychologically damaging all around for Asian Americans as well as non-Asian Americans.
I’m feeling more optimistic with current efforts in many states to teach more Asian American curriculum at the Grades K-12 level. For example, Illinois became the first state to pass a curricular mandate to teach Asian American history at this level. I hope that all elementary classes will be able to include these Asian American titles from Leaders Like Us so that the full spectrum of our communities are represented. What I love about the Leaders Like Us series is it shows all young readers that they, too, have the power to become the leaders we need in the world.
